"Out of Thine Own Mouth."

The most serious thing in a newspaper office is the file. It is an everiasting record. What the editor has written he has written, and there it is in black and white forever and forever.

Recently the Philadelphia Press, a Republican newspaper, has been telling its leaders that the hard times from 1893 to 1897 were due to the Democratic administration, but unfortunately for the Press, there is a file of that newspaper in the office of the Philadelphia Record and the editor of the Record has been prying into it, and has made most interesting discoveries and disclosures.

Mr. Cleveland was inducted into office on March 4, 1893. The New York panic began with the collapse of the Cordage Trusts May 5, 1893. On May 6th, the Press said:

"The wild speculation of the past five "The wild speculation of the past, five years in what are known as 'industrials' collapsed yesterday in a Wall Street panic which adds another to the Black Fridnys of the Street. * * * This country has been for nearly three years going through a slow and steady fall in values and a decrease in the earning eapacity of great corporations and enterprises, which has strained credit to the utmost."

sic on Wednesday night, Senator Daniel pointed out that the panie which finally spread all over the world began in Argentina. There was bankruptcy in Arof the Barings the following year, and the trouble spread and spread until it covered the whole carth. The Philalphia Press recognized the situation at the time and thus described it:

"Austria has failed to establish a gold standard. Germany is passing through an acute manufacturing crisis centering in caal and iron, and has a general election besides. In France, to meneral election besides. In France, to men-tion one fact, a run on the savings banks has drawn out $34,450,000 since January 1st. Belgium has just escaped revolu-tion. In England the unions report more men out of work than at any time past, Australia is in dire bankruptey. Argen-tina and Brazil are improving; nothing more. No recovery is apparent in India and China. This world-wide situation can-not help affecting this country."

Yet, the Press now has the audacity that the trouble of 1893 was due to Democratic rule!

world-wide troubles, we had special troubles at home. The Democratic administration was wrestling with the Sherman silver purchase act, a Republican measure, and it gave the adminiswould fall to a silver basis and nothing prevented this but the courageous action of Mr. Cleveland in selling bonds and restoring the gold reserve. The Philadelphia Press, a Republican newspaper, which is now criticising Mr. Cleveland for his action and charging up the panic to his account, on June 7, 1893, made this

"Reduce this reserve and confidence "Reduce this reserve and confidence Restore it and confidence returns." * * When the reserve was endangered the Press asserted—and it was almost alone among New York and Philadelphia papers to assert it—that if the reserve was broken panic would come because confidence in the gold value of our currency would be Impaired. Panic has come. This confidence has been limitared. Nothing can restore confidence come. This confidence on confidence ed. Nothing can restore confidence but emphatic action by the President which shows that the reserve will be protected. There is only one way to protect the reserve—sell bonds and buy gold. • • • President Cleveland will still be under the legal abligation. under the legal obligation to keep our rrency equal to gold, and he must sell nds or force a silver panic to which nat has passed and is passing is a

At another time the Press said that "The distrust and lack of confidence which is extending through the country began with the export of gold from th country and the reduction of the treasury gold reserve below $100,000,000," still again on June 9th, in further discussing the subject it said:

cussing the subject it said;

"The first original cause of this distrust was the Bland silver bill and its successive lightweight additions to the currency, succeeded by the last silver bill and its additions, full weight, but still only silver; but this original cause began to operate only when the treasury reserve was broken. When this happened there began that general distrust which has strained credit, and that general desire and determination to increase reserves which has swept currency out of sight. Fortunately, most fortunately, the extra session called by President Cleveland can remove the cause by suspending silver purchases."

The Times-Dispatch service in reproducing it from the columns of the Press. No comment is necessary. The Press at that time stated the simple truth about the situation and now that paper and other Republican to let the subject drop and to stop prating about Democracy and hard times, The panic of 1893 was due in a general way to world-wide conditions and in a special way to Republican legislation. There is absolutely no escape from this, and the Philadelphia Press confessed it at the time. Let the Press live up to its confession, and stop misrepresenting the Democracy.

Republican Intolerance.

At the meeting in Lynchburg of the Grand Camp of Confederate Veterans. Commander George L. Christian said that In June last he received an invitation to attend a meeting of the Grand Army of the Republic in Boston, but for sons assigned, he had declined. In the same connection, The Times-Dispatch took occasion to remark that in its opinion reunions between the Blue and the Gray were to be discouraged because they did not promote good fellowship, but tended rather to revive bitter memories and stir up strife between the sections. Judgo Christian's statement and the comment of The Times-Dispatch called forth a remarkable tirade from the Virginia Press, a Republican organ at Roanoke, in which the writer said that he were the gray for four long years, and loved the memories of that struggie, but added that "A more cruel, useless and wicked war on the part of those who undertook to disrupt this glorious Union . . . was never waged;" that "the principle was wrong;" that "it was based upon bondage of the human race and upon the claim of the constitutional right of a State to disrupt the Union-a claim that had been discounted and protested in the legislative forum of the country."

A more humiliating confession than this we have never seen. It is inconceivable to us that any man who "wore the gray for four years" and took part in the struggle for State's rights, should at this late day openly confess that the war in which he fought was a useless and wicked war, wrong in principle and based upon the bondage of the human race, We cannot trust ourselves to characterize such a man nor can we seriously enter into a discussion with him of the principles for which Southern patriots fought. Our only purpose in noticing the article at all is to show the animus of a Republican newspaper in Virginia which undertakes to lead public thought and to direct the politics of this Commonwealth.

Proceeding with the discussion, the Press says:

"When such old chronic grumblers and political eye sores as George L. Chris-tian and J. William Jones, who have lived off the notoriety gained by efforts lived off the notoriety games of the manufacture history to order, and to organize Sons of Veterans to pump into them the doctrines of secession and a spirit of hatred to their government and to their follow countrymen, and then to be backed up by so able and respectable journal as The Times-Dispatch, it is time for some one to protest, and we do frotest with all the vim, energy and determination left in our old Confederate body. This writer helped to organize Lee Camp of Confederate Veterans, the first and now the releast camp in the South. It was organized for the social meeting and commingling of the old boys, and to assist comrades in distress. But for the help they received from the G. A. R. posts, the splendt home and hall they now own would have been a dream. The o manufacture history to order, and t now own would have been a dream. now own would have been a dream. The grandest times, the finest trips, the happlest moments, the most elaborate entertainments ever enjoyed by that camp was tendered by the boys in blue in Boston, Newark. New York and Buffalo, and in turn they have entertained many G. A. R. posts. Yet these people teach us and our children that we must not affiliate or associate. We must be taught to hate those who prevented us from destroying the government and adopting a principle of State sovereignty taught to nate those who prevented us from destroying the government and adopting a principle of State sovereignty that would have placed this grand country at the mercy of a set of petty State sovereigns to change and revolutionize with every change of the moon, as they do in South America.

"Any other government but our own, made by a free and enlightened records."

tration many a sleepless night. The gold made by a free and enlightened people, would suppress The Times-Dispatch and lang Christian and Jones as traitors, called "the endless chain process," and was threatened with annihilation. Business men were fearing that the country indignation.' Here is a fair sample of Republican intolerance. Because loyal Confederate veterans prefer not to take part in meetings whose design is to cault over the downfall of the Confederacy and because a newspaper dares to say that reunions between the veterans of the North and the veterans of the South are to be discouraged; there is a distinct intimation on the part of the repentant and recanting ex-Confederate who presides over the editorial columns of this Republican newspaper that Judge Christian and Dr. Jones ought to be hung, and that The Times Dispatch ought to be suppressed. We could well afford to laugh at this childish distribe if it were not for the fact that it proceeds from a Republican source and shows the animus of Republicanism. It is an outburst of the intolerant spirit of imperialism and monism. It is written in that spirit which exalts the government, which holds that fore, tolerates no criticism of the king. It is written in that spirit which censors the press and makes the editors of newspapers refrain from all expressions of opinion which in any way antagonizes the powers that be. The article could not have been more arrogant and imperial Roosevelt himself. It is a warnfor that matter, in all sections. It is a warning against the continuation of the regime which would hang dissenters and the same point. "When the mob begins by lynching negroes," said he, "it will be but a short time before white men with no friends will be dealt with in the same manner, and then will commence a reign of disorder, and you might as well tear down the courthouse and destroy your jall."

Our entire court system is designed to protect the rights of individuals, to protect the single man from the force of superior numbers, to protect the weak from the strong. If there were no laws there would be no means of preventing the strong man from preying upon his weaker brother, or a company of men from preying upon idividuals. Brute force and not equity and justice would prevall. In such a system rich men could hire warriors to come and protect their The poor men would be the sufferers, the poor, to those who have not the means of building and maintaining strong eastles, to uphold the law which if maintained makes them secure in all their rights of person and property. The poor tries to break down the bulwarks of the most dangerous foes and weakening the place instead of the due administration have created something that is subversive of every principle of good government home and the track of the assassin at every man's door." All men who put a proper value upon security must keep these precents always in mind.

Parker's Receptions.

The Sun in its own funny way suggested that Judge Parker come un and see him. It also suggested might be employed advantageously in running popular excursions to New York

Unfortunately the Democrats are poor, and have not the money to spend in this way, but Judge Parker is holding public receptions in New York and meeting the people and shaking them by the hand, and he is thereby making votes If the Sun's merry suggestion could be put into practical effect, there would be 1905.

It is very hard at this distance to say with any degree of certainty what will be the effect upon the Wisconsin contest of the decision of the Supreme Court in favor of LaFollette. He will doubtless be elected Governor, but it remains to be seen whether or not the Stalwarts will support the cleven Republican electors If they refuse, the Democrats will have a chance to elect at least cleven of their

Apart from all this, however, we are glad that LaFollette has won. THE COMMUTER'S MORNING TRAIN

What a Man Should Have Every Morning Before, Starting for the Train-The Customary Rush, the Ride in the Smoker and the Effects-Business Factors Sacrificed by the Half Hour's Delay in Rising.

By Margaret E. Sangster.

Modern business life is strenuous and exacting. Competition is tremendous A severe tax on the vitality of the ordi nary man is made by the peremptory demand of the railway schedule and the relentless grasp of business hours. Business has monopolized vast tracts of land and established itself imperiously upon wide spaces of large cities. Men must go to business daily. The office, the shop, the counting-room, the factory claim the daylight of half the year and eat out the sunny heart of the other half. Men mus work. The price of success is incessant struggle, and the price even of a foot-hold is a tenacity and fearlessness that holds on to a place with the grip of a hold is a tenacity and fearlessness that holds on to a place with the grip of a buil-dog's jaws.

But men must live as well as work. And to live they must have homes. The homes where they dwell with the dear ones, except in small towns and villages, are remote from their business stamping ground. They are united to the officer or the mill by a railway that may be in an underground tunnel or on an overhead platform, or that may span rivers and flash past fields and hamlets, in the twinkling of an eye. Possibly a ferry may be the means of connection, or there may be a mighty bridge, thrown boldly across a deep stream, a bridge that vibrates with the pleasing security of perfect engineering when the successive steam and electric trains and the automobiles thunder along its length.

Somehow or other there is a way of getting to business, and facessarily an inflexible schedule, to which the commuting man of business from president to obscure employe, must conform.

To start happily on the morning road, a man needs a tub, a shave, a chat with his wife as he ties his four-in-hand, and a good breakfast. All this means time. If the man rises when he is called, and has leisure for his breakfast, and a minute to spare for a kiss to the wife and the baby, all is well. Most mon, though virtuous in theory, are vicious in practice when the problem concerns shaking off drowsiness in the morning.

Most men, though wise as Solomon, are

Most men, though wise as Solomon, are dunces when fate confronts them will the urgency of the morning train. "Time to burn!" John shouts as he de-"Time to burn!" John should as he de-cends the stairs, two steps at a time, swallows red-hot coffee at two or three farming guips, boits a biscuit and a nit of steak, and is off. The time to burn that he talks of is burning up his youth, that he talks of is burning up his youth, his energy, and his power of resisting disease. It is abbreviating his working life. But he does not dream of this as a possible result.

The continental light breakfast of coffee and rolls is the best breakfast in the world for women who are at home, and may sit down at noon to a sufficient and toothsome luncheon. For the man who must toil through a long day with a bite swallowed at a restaurant counter at midday a very different breakfast is imperative. Fruit, cereal, broiled meat and potatoes, good bread, good butter and coffee are not too much to set before this man. But he must not race through it. To do himself justice he must have enough time to eat the meal and enough margin to walk briskly, not tear wildly, to the train, when the meal is over, see must rise early or pay the penalty in chronic dyspepsia.

Watch the suburbanite as he leaps with insane furly on the rear end of the outgoing train. He has sprinted to reach it, within less than an inch of his lite if he only knew the Indignation who which nature, who never forgets to make reprised, regards his treatment of his heart.

polluted atmosphere,

But just a few years pass. The man has a break-down. It appears to be sudden. It is, however, no more sudden than any other catastrophe for which diligent preparations have been carefully made. The underpinning has been loosened. Down goes the man's house of health. The heart succumbs to the repeated strains that have weakened it; the lungs enfeethed have no resistance to offer the deadly germ that steals on them like a thief in the night, the kidneys cease to do their beneficent office and turn into poisonous foes. Unwittingly the man has expended his whole physical capital, and there is nothing left for him but to die. He tries too late to recover the lost ground. His widow will struggle on and bring up the children as well as she can, with the ald of the life insurance and her own efforts. Only the pity of it is that, in five cases out of six the man need not have committed his surance and her own efforts. Only the pity of it is that, in five cases out of six, the man need not have committed his

him to live till foursoro.

I am familiar with the excuses men plead when entreated to put on the brakes. In the vigor of the twenties they laugh to seen the representation that they ought to make haste slowly. All the way to fitty a man seems to think it a duty to catch a train by the skin of his teeth. Heart failure does not daunt him in the least.

But heart failure is not the only specter that waves a land when the business man rushes too madly for his morning train. The cool judgment, the unerring tact, the fine bonhomie which are factors in a man's ultimate success are periled when he overdraws on his resources of physical strength. Let any man try the prescription here given, of moderation, for six months, and he will be converted to its standard for the rest of his days. (Copyright, 1994, by Joseph B. Bowles.)
